

Left in the Dark: Power Outages in an Interconnected World

Kate Konschnik

Director of the Climate and Energy Program, Nicholas Institute, Duke University

Kate Konschnik directs the Climate & Energy Program at the Nicholas Institute for Environmental Policy Solutions at Duke University and is a Senior Lecturing Fellow at Duke Law School. Kate's research focuses on policy options for public electric utility regulation and electricity market reforms to accommodate new technologies, electrification of other sectors, and air quality and decarbonization goals. Kate joined Duke from Harvard Law School, where she founded and directed the Harvard Environmental Policy Initiative for five years. Previously, Kate was Chief Environmental Counsel for U.S. Senator Sheldon Whitehouse, and an Environmental Enforcement Trial Attorney at the U.S. Department of Justice. Kate holds a law degree with honors from the University of California, Hastings College of the Law, and a bachelor's degree in political science from Tufts University.