

Storytelling to Promote Action

Jacob Margolis

Born and raised in earthquake country, Jacob knows first hand what it's like to be ripped from your bed in the middle of the night with the ground shaking beneath your feet. Hoping to help make sense of our crazy world, he became KPCC's science reporter and host of The Big One.

Misha Euceph

Misha grew up in Pakistan thinking earthquakes were a fun way of getting out of school. After producing this show, she cowers under her dining room table every time she feels a train go by, mistaking it for the big one.

Arwen Champion Nicks

Arwen Champion Nicks has spent collective months of her life watching action and disaster movies but had no clue what she should do in the case of a natural disaster until she began working on The Big One. She now owns flint, a compass, life straws and a whole bunch of distilled water.
