

FEMA Urges Preparedness Ahead of Severe Weather

Release Date: Th3 31, 2023

PRATTVILLE, Ala. – FEMA urges residents in the state of Alabama to stay alert for weather risks from today into the weekend. The National Weather Service is predicting intense and widespread severe thunderstorms including tornadoes in some areas.

Remain alert, keep your cell phone charged, and take the basic precautions needed now to potentially save lives and protect property when severe weather strikes.

Severe weather, that could include long-track tornados, may occur Friday afternoon into the overnight hours for parts of Alabama.

Anyone living in these areas should take precautions ahead of the storms:

- Have several ways to receive alerts. Download the updated free FEMA App (available in English and Spanish) to receive real-time emergency alerts from the National Weather Service and find a nearby shelter.
- Pay attention to local alerts and warnings and follow any guidance by local officials.
- Check on neighbors. As you prepare your family and loved ones for a disaster, check on neighbors and folks in your community to see if they are doing the same or help them get started.
- Older adults may need extra assistance to prepare for the storm. Visit Ready.gov/seniors for more information. For people with disabilities and their families, it is important to consider individual circumstances and needs to effectively prepare for emergencies and disasters. Visit Individuals with Disabilities to learn more.
- Prepare your property for dangerous weather now by cleaning of any large or loose materials near your property. Remove dead trees, hanging branches, and loose objects in your yard or patio that could become a dangerous projectile during severe winds.
